Everyday Tips for Keeping Mentally Healthy

Here are a few healthy practices that can be easily adopted into your daily life. The idea is that a lot of small, purposeful actions can add up to a significant overall effect. Apply some of these ideas on a regular basis and you’ll find yourself feeling rejuvenated and more confident:

1. Learn how to cope with negative thoughts:

Negative thoughts can be insistent and loud: don’t let them take over. Distract yourself or comfort yourself if you can’t solve a problem right away. Try seeing the issue from all sides rather than from just one point of view.

2. Be in the present:

When you’re out for a walk or socializing, turn off the cell phone and take in all the sights and sounds around you.

3. ‘Collect’ positive emotional moments:

Make a point of thinking about the times when you’ve felt pleasure, comfort, tenderness, confidence or other positive emotions.

4. Enjoy hobbies:

A hobby helps bring balance to your life. You’re doing something because you want to, not because you have to. There’s no pressure. It’s a form of mental stimulation too.

5. Treat yourself well:

It could be a good meal, a bubble bath, a movie, or just sitting in the park enjoying nature. Small daily treats add up for a positive effect.

6. Live a healthier, more active life:

Eat healthy foods, be active and get enough sleep. Regular physical activity is good for the mind. It can even reduce depression and anxiety. Share your activity with others; social connections are beneficial too.

Mental illness indirectly affects everyone at some time through a family member, friend or colleague.

Asking for help

While family and friends are important supports, there are other resources out there to help you as well. Other possible sources of information and inspiration include:

- websites of reputable mental health organizations: www.aptc.org; www.nami.org
- books about specific mental health problems
- audio and video resources
- courses and workshops offered through schools, community colleges and universities
- people you admire for their ability to find balance
Build your Support System for Positive Mental Health

1. Good relationships at work:

Supportive relationships in the workplace are important to your mental health. Reach out to others around you. Listen to the concerns of co-workers. Share a laugh with them. You’ll find it reduces stress, and brings more satisfaction and security to your professional and personal life.

2. Neighborly relations:

Look across the road or across the hallway. Most of us live close to others but we rarely talk to them. A simple gesture is all it takes to build support with a neighbor. Say hello. Welcome newcomers to the neighborhood. Be there for your neighbors and help build strong neighborly connections.

3. Ties to your community:

Joining community groups, clubs and organizations makes you a part of something bigger. Contribute to your community and it will be part of your social network. You will reap the rewards by feeling connected and having a sense of purpose.

4. Caring relationships:

When we care for others and others care for us we feel valued. You may find this caring relationship in a best friend, a family member, neighbor or caregiver. These relationships can be the most rewarding parts of our lives, but sometimes we forget to maintain them. Do you always wait to be contacted by friends? Do you only connect with friends when you need a favor? Make contacting friends first a priority. Make a plan to reach out a few times a month.
